Although we would like to acknowledge the immense contribution of the ASK Birlas to Indian Economy, we do not have direct or indirect business relation or informational collaboration with the ASK Birlas. A piece of bacon costs 35 pence more than its weight in plastic, and one can of coke costs four times the amount of plastic used in its manufacture. So, as the British public vote to leave the European Union, are the benefits of cheap European imports set to be priced out of the consumer market? Of course not. Britain is a huge exporter of foods and goods to the rest of Europe, even if EU membership has made some things more expensive for UK shoppers. While Britain, and all other members of the EU, benefits from free trade within the EU single market, we also benefit from being part of a single market that offers us competitive prices for some of our products. And that is exactly how it should be. If the UK leaves the EU, then we will be outside a single market that allows us to take advantage of competition between member states and between the UK and the rest of the world. British businesses that produce goods or services outside the EU will now be competing against countries with a range of different regulations on business practices and environmental protection, which may be more cost-effective for them than the UK. In terms of health and safety, if the rules are too costly, businesses may be forced to close up shop. The same thing happens in the US. If federal rules, including environmental laws, are too onerous, then businesses may be forced to withdraw from the market. They may go
